Republicans said the legislation, which they call the Eliminate Waste, Fraud and Abuse in Government Spending Act, is meant to make government more efficient and effective. Democrats argued the bill will give President Barack Obama the ability to unilaterally implement numerous programs, such as the creation of "green" jobs and the implementation of health insurance exchanges, without congressional approval. The bill also includes a provision directing the Government Accountability Office, the investigative arm of Congress, to create a commission tasked with preventing fraud and waste in federal programs. The bill, which passed by a vote of 247-174, is scheduled to be sent to the Senate, where it is sure to encounter stiff opposition. The bill is the third time the House has passed a version of the Eliminate Waste, Fraud and Abuse in Government Spending Act. The first two versions, which passed the House in 2011 and 2012, did not make it through the Senate. "This bill is the solution to our overspending and our out-of-control federal spending," said Rep. Sam Graves (R-Mo.), the ranking member on the Ways and Means Committee. The legislation would prevent any federal agency from spending more than $10 million in any given fiscal year unless Congress approves the transfer. Graves said the bill would "level the playing field" for federal agencies with more resources. The bill's backers said the legislation would rein in unchecked power of federal agencies. The bill would also require that agencies using funds from the Highway Trust Fund pay back outstanding highway project obligations with newly appropriated highway funds. The fund is scheduled to run out of money at the end of this month, potentially forcing the government to shut down national highways unless Congress extends it. "Today, we are hitting the end of the Highway Trust Fund and this bill gives Congress and the American taxpayer time to get it right," said Rep. Bill Shuster
