They sought a medical expert who had experience with premies. Their quest led them to a neonatologist named Joseph Scholtes. After testing baby Alexis and his twin brother, 9-pound-11-ounce James, in 1965, Joseph Scholtes and his colleagues advised against the discharge of both infants from the hospital. They recommended that the boys stay for another two weeks to allow the babies' lungs to strengthen. The boys were released home, but, at a month old, both were rushed to Children's Hospital, where they underwent months of therapy. "I don't think they should have come home," Alexis' father, Bill, recalls. "It was very traumatic to us." The boys had been born March 1, 1965, one day before Halloween. The Scholtzes, who had hosted a large party, also hosted a dance that evening. After the dance, Alexis and James were placed in a plastic bag

My name is Joanna. I am a 33-year-old wife and mother of four. I am currently a stay-at-home mom to my four sweet kids. I love Jesus, cooking, playing with my kids, running, and reading. Join me on this journey of healthy living and finding a balance of work and home. Category Archives: quick cooking This post is about our new appreciation for the one-pot meals. Yes, I'm talking about your regular Chili Mac and cheesy chicken, your homemade lasagna and even your baked potatoes. Basically, any one-pot meal that you make in the crockpot. The other day, I started a huge batch of homemade chocolate chip cookies for our neighborhood Food Drive. I had plenty of chocolate chips that needed to be used and I'm also on a baking kick. I realized that I had all of these left over ingredients and the pantry was getting really low. I did a lot of brainstorming on what else I could make with these ingredients. My mind was racing. All I could think about were the easy one-pot meals like chili and chili mac. What about tacos? With all of these random ingredients, you could make salsa verde, a quick pulled pork, homemade chicken chili, or even a cheesy broccoli casserole. If you make your meals in the crockpot, you should plan on making your meals ahead of time. Having a good rotation of "easy meals" that you can make ahead of time, store in the freezer, and then have on hand as needed. Does this help you be more flexible with your schedule? This can also allow you to eat healthy and live a healthier lifestyle. Keep these ideas in mind for easy one-pot meals or meals that you can easily make ahead of time. For the last few weeks, I have been trying to buy and use
