Continuing on the learning process, I recommend that once you have an Adobe Creative Cloud account, you try out some of the other programs. However, you can only have a Creative Cloud account to use all of the features that are available on the web, on mobile applications, and on the desktop programs. I am sure you have already mostly figured out the desktop programs but there are Android and IOS applications that I haven't yet mentioned. One of my favorite programs which you can use with an IOS or android device is Adobe Edge Web Designer. This program allows you to add design elements to top websites. I have no idea why you would want this to be honest. Design Elements: Adobe Photoshop has a lot to offer for both designers and casual users alike. Graphic designers will greatly appreciate the collaboration features that are built into the program. These features allow you to easily access different levels of an image, tack a layer onto the image, and remove a layer from an image. File formats are equally as important here as they are with any software tool. File formats specific to Photoshop allow designers to easily associate and retrieve all the information associated with their still image. The file formats offered include TIFF, PSD, JPEG, GIF, PNG, and PDF. The PSD stands for Photoshop Document, while the other formats are simply for rendering. e3d0a04c9c

Lightroom – Lightroom is the all-in-one camera, catalog, and design workflow tool – which not only creates stunning prints from your best memories, but also helps you manage and organize them. It even syncs all your photos and videos right to your phone. For any photographers, the wide range of features and compatibility of the software is a boon. With the launch of the Adobe Lightroom CC, photos can be edited as well as directly through the camera. HDR Photography – In high dynamic range or HDR, different types of imagery are combined, typically in a single image, to render a wide range of tones of light and shadow, which may have been otherwise impossible to capture in a single scene. The double exposure technique is a good example of HDR. Photographers need to combine multiple exposures to capture the desired image, then to tweak and balance the colors and exposure for an ideal print. Color Correction – Since the beginning of the day, a colorist will have to put a lot of colored man hours into the same set of photographs. Color corrections always involve images of the same type with more or less similar characteristics. The monotone settings of a photograph (i.e. black&white) will create a monotone correction, which would be the same throughout the entire image. Hair & Face – The need for creating soft or defined facial features is a common need for photographers. The addition of features like hair correction, image retouching, and color correction are essential for one's image editing software. Hair & Face, the only feature that is exclusive to Photoshop, makes the image sharpening easy.

Sketch, a powerful but easy-to-learn tool for creating and editing vector graphics, was originally released as a supplement to Photoshop. Now it's available as a standalone app, a browser extension, a web app, and even a mobile device app. Sketch was once a complimentary download to Photoshop, but it now has its own website and reports Adobe as the fastest-growing startup in the U.S. A new "Contact Sheet" is now available in Photoshop CC. Click the "Photoshop" icon in the main menu and select "New" to access the new Contact Sheet. This function will import any of the supported cameras and tablets into one large image showcase. This is great for planning a photo shoot, for storing your images in an archive, or even for a quick and easy showing of all your key images to clients. The integration of a real-time color engine to the existing image editing features is significant. The result is a faster and more powerful tool that allows professionals to accomplish real-time editing in the tool itself while retaining the same hardware-independent benefits that the software has been known for since its inception. John Nack, CTO of Adobe, announced that "Photoshop will no longer generate files using the Apple ColorSync technology. As you know, since launch, Apple and Adobe have collaborated on a standard color profile file format called ColorSync. This has facilitated the sharing of color adjustments, and simplified color workflow across devices. However, since launch of Procreate 1.0, we have made significant advances in what can be done in Photoshop without relying on ColorSync." Since the announcement of this change the Adobe forum has been buzzing with excitement that Photoshop will no longer rely on ColorSync.
