Designing websites, particularly for the times of day when people are looking for something particular to click on, has never been a problem for Adam. He's creating complex, interactive and even tactile websites for fun and countless clients. This includes building websites for several gaming companies, graphic design firms and businesses operating online. And it all started with learning Photoshop at an early age.

When it comes to reviewing a new app, we prefer to let an actual human give it a try. That's why we break new software down into several categories, so that you can quickly get a feel for it without taking the plunge. A common, and very good practice is to look for free trials. If you can download and use the software for a while without committing to a full-fledged license, it's a lot more likely to net you a good review. After using Photoshop for a while, you'll find that you'll seriously struggle without it. And yet, some companies refuse to sell it because people learn Photoshop and need then to buy other software. That's a move no company has gotten away with for long. But if you do own a copy of Photoshop, and you're feeling a little bit strapped for cash, why not go for a more economic option? If you're looking to recreate the Photoshop mobile experience on the iPad as a coffee table, a chair or a stand, you can do so without the hefty pricetag. One good thing about being marginally short of cash is showing someone something that will make them happy or offer them support. We've all heard horror stories about buying Windows or software and then being struck with the bill. Unfortunately, the fact that you're short on cash means that you're not going to be able to afford something that's going to do something you really like, like Photoshop.

This year, Adobe added Premiere Rush and Premiere Clip video editing to its Creative Cloud portfolio. The consumer-oriented products are part of the company's business unit of products aimed at teenagers and young adults. (Unlike other Creative Cloud users, young professionals ages 18 to 29 can also subscribe to the Foundation, a $15/month service and an educational toolset that enables them to buy the company's apps.) Adobe also introduced a new high dynamic range photo editing feature in recent updates to its program. The feature mimics the way cameras capture a wider range of tones than the human eye can perceive. The software automatically creates HDR images from multiple low-dynamic range (LDR) images. The new feature may make it easier for photographers and prosumers to shoot photos with less compression and output greater dynamic range, making RAW photos less of a challenge. The new software can slightly unify areas of mixed-tone LDR photos, but more work is needed to improve the technology. Certain shapes in artworks were flattened in previous versions of Photoshop. This year, the company introduced new features that will nearly always flatten the artwork (i.e., smooth out some zoom-in views of the shapes). However, you can still save the file as a flattened image. Photoshop will keep the overall shape of the artwork (i.e., mountains, mountains and valleys, etc.) unchanged if you do so. This new function makes it easier to use Photoshop for beginners who take selfies in public and have the software remove any perspectives added for digital editing.
